

Caucus-race

“What is a Caucus-race?” said Alice. “Why,” said the Dodo, “the best way to explain it is to do it.”

First it marked out a race-course, in a sort of circle, (“the exact shape doesn’t matter,” it said,) and then all the party were placed along the course, here and there. There was no “One, two, three, and away,” but they began running when they liked, and left off when they liked, so that it was not easy to know when the race was over.
